<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Page</th>
<th>Section</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1</td>
<td>Blickwechsel: Contemporary Turkey Studies</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>5</td>
<td>Einstein Fellows Research Group</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>7</td>
<td>Conference Programme</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>11</td>
<td>Programme Information</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>31</td>
<td>Project summaries</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>65</td>
<td>Short bios of conference participants</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
The interdisciplinary programme ‘Blickwechsel: Contemporary Turkey Studies’ explores different aspects of current Turkish society, economy and politics. Through five academic projects, it offers a platform for exchange in a variety of formats and approaches. A coordination team at Humboldt-Universität zu Berlin supports the cooperation between the projects and organises events and activities on contemporary issues in Turkey aiming to reach both an academic audience and a broader public.

Within the framework of this programme, Stiftung Mercator funds the academic examination of Turkey in Germany and, simultaneously, the interconnectedness of both countries in the areas of research and teaching. Publicly shared knowledge and insights create new perspectives on Turkey as well as on Germany; it is only through the interplay of both perspectives that a comprehensive picture forms and new narratives emerge.
The conference is organised by the coordination team of the programme “Blickwechsel: Contemporary Turkey Studies” at the institute for Social Sciences of Humboldt-Universität zu Berlin and funded by Einstein Foundation and Stiftung Mercator.

Coordination team:

Ertuğ Tombuş: Academic Coordinator
Tuğba Yalçınkaya: Project Coordinator and Coordinator for Public Relations and Academic Communication
Mathis Gann: Project Assistant
Maximiliane Schneider: Project Assistant

Former team members:

Bettina Emir: Project coordinator
İrmak Ekin Karel: Project assistant
Lisa Klein: Project assistant

Stiftung Mercator:

David Alders: Project manager
Activities implemented by the Blickwechsel coordination team at Humboldt-Universität zu Berlin between 2017-2019:
Public events have been realised.

Off-campus events (film screenings, readings, ‘We, the City’ conference and more) have taken place.

Closed events (workshops, trainings) have been realised.

Speakers have attended.

Einstein Fellows have joined to the Institute of Social Sciences (ISW) affiliated with the Berlin Institute for Empirical Research on Migration and Integration (BIM), and the Law & Society Institute (LSI).

Audience members have participated.

Cooperation partners have joined in collaboration.
The Einstein Fellows Research Group at Humboldt-Universität zu Berlin, funded by the programme “Wissenschaftsfreiheit” by Einstein Foundation Berlin, is composed of eight scholars with a background in critical academia in Turkey. The research focus of the group is twofold: Four researchers are affiliated with the Berlin Institute for Empirical Research on Migration and Integration (BIM) and work on forced migration and diasporas. Rising authoritarianism in Turkey is the main research focus of the four scholars who are affiliated to the Institute of Social Sciences (ISW) and the Integrative Research Institute for Law and Society (LSI).
With their research focusing on Turkey the Einstein Fellows Research Group is a valuable contribution to the already established network of the programme “Blickwechsel: Contemporary Turkey Studies” at the Institute of Social Sciences. Within the framework of this cooperation jointly organized events and collaboration on many different levels are taking place.

Research Group Coordinator: Anne Berger
Research Assistant: Liana Harutyunyan
Einstein Fellows: Sinem Adar, Gülçin Balamir Coşkun, Begüm Başdaş, Övgür Çiçek, Tuba İnal-Çekić, Ayşegül Kars Kaynar, Zeynep Kivilcim, Özlem Savaş
13—15 Nov

Exhibition:
Courageous Women: Women’s and Gender Studies in Turkey’s Academia

by the research project “Women’s and Gender Studies in Turkey: Institutionalisation and Transformation” Humboldt Graduate School, Room 122
WED 13
DAY 1

18:00 – 19:30
Opening-Keynote Lecture by Arjun Appadurai:
The Rise of the Post-democratic State:
The Perspective from India
19:30
Reception

THU 14
DAY 2

10:00 – 10:30
Registration
10:30 – 11:00
Welcome
11:00 – 12:30
Panel I: Constitutionalism, Law, and Democracy in Turkey
Chair: Urszula Woźniak (Humboldt-Universität zu Berlin)
Maria Abad Andrade (Humboldt-Universität zu Berlin)
Ece Göztepe (Bilkent University)
Silvia von Steinsdorff (Humboldt-Universität zu Berlin)
Ertuğ Tombuş (Humboldt-Universität zu Berlin)
İrem Tuncer-Ebetürk (WZB Berlin Social Science Center)
12:30 – 13:15
Lunch
Exhibition Talk: Courageous Women: Women’s and Gender Studies in Turkey’s Academia
With the attendance of the photographer
Seçkin Uçan Divan, Humboldt Graduate School, Room 122

Panel II: A Contested Relationship – Narratives in EU/German-Turkish Relations Three Years on Chair: Anke Schönla (University of Cologne)
Senem Aydın-Düzgit (Istanbul Policy Center)
Funda Tekin (Institute for European Politics)
Discussants: Moritz Rau (University of Cologne), Özgehan Şenyuva (Middle East Technical University)
Wolfgang Wessels (University of Cologne)

Coffee Break

Panel III: What moves Women’s and Gender Studies at Universities in Turkey? Dynamics of Institutionalisation
Chair: Yasemin Karakaşoğlu (University of Bremen)
Charlotte Binder (University of Bremen)
Deniz Dağ (University of Bremen)
Sevgi Ucan Çubukçu (formerly Istanbul University)
Discussant: Betül Yarar (University of Bremen)

Coffee Break

Einstein Fellows Research Group Panel: Reflections on Authoritarian Governance
Chair: Sinem Adar (Centre for Applied Turkey Studies, SWP)
Gülçin Balamir Coşkun (Humboldt-Universität zu Berlin)
Tuba İnal-Çekiç (Humboldt-Universität zu Berlin)
Ayşegül Kars Kaynar (Humboldt-Universität zu Berlin)
Zeynep Kivilcim (Humboldt-Universität zu Berlin)
FRI 15
DAY 3

09:30–11:00  Panel IV: ‘Ne mutlu ateistim diyene’
Atheism & The Politics of Culture in Contemporary Turkey

Kaya Akyıldız (Bahçeşehir University)
Ivo Furman (Istanbul Bilgi University)
Pierre Hecker (University of Marburg)

Discussant: Ayşe Çavdar (University of Marburg)

11:00–11:30  Coffee Break

11:30–13:00  Panel V: Development of Social Rights in Turkey

Chair: Lutz Leisering (University of Bielefeld)
Tolga Bölifebaşı (Bilkent University)
Kerem Öktem (University of Bielefeld)

Discussant: İpek Göçmen (Max Planck Institute for the Study of Societies)

11:30–13:00  Closed Workshop: After the European Elections: New People, New Narratives, New Phase in EU-Turkey Relations?

by the project TRIANGLE - Blickwechsel in EU/German-Turkish Relations Beyond Conflicts

13:00–13:30  Closing Remarks

13:30–14:30  Lunch
PROJECT INFORMATION
Rights and equality in contemporary Turkey
Opening Lecture by Arjun Appadurai

The Rise of the Post-Democratic State: The Perspective from India in Turkey

Arjun Appadurai is the Goddard Professor in Media, Culture and Communication at New York University, where he is also Senior Fellow at the Institute for Public Knowledge, and Professor of Anthropology and Globalisation at the Hertie School in Berlin. He serves as Honorary Professor in the Department of Media and Communication, Erasmus University, Rotterdam, Tata Chair Professor at The Tata Institute for Social Sciences, Mumbai and as a Senior Research Partner at the Max-Planck Institute for Religious and Ethnic Diversity, Göttingen. He was previously Senior Advisor for Global Initiatives at The New School in New York City, where he also held a Distinguished Professorship as the John Dewey Distinguished Professor in the Social Sciences. Arjun Appadurai was the Provost and Vice President for Academic Affairs at The New School from 2004-2006. He was formerly the William K. Lanman Jr. Professor of International Studies, Professor of Anthropology, and Director of the Center on Cities and Globalization at Yale University. Appadurai is the founder and now the President of PUKAR (Partners for Urban Knowledge Action and Research), a non-profit organization based in and oriented to the city of Mumbai (India).

Professor Appadurai earned his Ph.D. (1976) from The Committee on Social Thought at the University of Chicago. He has authored numerous books and scholarly articles, including Fear of Small Numbers: An Essay on the Geography of Anger (Duke 2006) and Modernity at Large: Cultural Dimensions of Globalization, (Minnesota 1996; Oxford India 1997). His books have been translated into French, German, Spanish, Portuguese, Japanese, Chinese and Italian.

Arjun Appadurai has held numerous fellowships and scholarships and has received several scholarly honors, including residential fellowships at the Center for Advanced Study in Rights and equality in contemporary Turkey.
Arjun Appadurai
the Behavioral Sciences in Palo Alto (California) and the Institute for Advanced Study in Princeton. He was elected a Fellow of the American Academy of Arts and Sciences in 1997.

He has also served as a consultant or advisor to a wide range of public and private organizations, including many major foundations (Ford, MacArthur, and Rockefeller); UNESCO; UNDP; the World Bank; the National Endowment for the Humanities; the National Science Foundation; and the Infosys Foundation. He currently serves on the Advisory Board for the Asian Art Initiative at the Solomon Guggenheim Museum and on the Scientific Advisory Board of the Forum D'Avignon in Paris.

In the exhibition “Courageous Women: Women’s and Gender Studies in Turkey’s Academia” 26 women academics are portrayed. These pioneers of academic feminism were extremely significant for the establishment of Women’s and Gender Studies (WGS) at universities in Turkey. The exhibition gathers a representative group of living and deceased figures among the first generation of WGS scholars from different scientific disciplines. What they all have in common is not only that they have been over 60 years of age but also, and in particular their outstanding contribution to the institutionalisation of WGS.
The foundation of about a hundred Application and Research Centres of WGS at universities in Turkey is just one outcome of their many efforts, combining scientific success with political commitment to fight for women’s rights.

The exhibition is an homage to the first generation of Women’s and Gender Researchers in Turkey. In addition, it aims to draw attention to the current threatening situation of WGS in Turkey and other countries of the world.

This exhibition was developed in the framework of the research project on “Women’s and Gender Studies in Turkey: Institutionalisation and Transformation”. The empirical study examines the institutionalisation and transformation processes of Women’s and Gender Studies Centres at universities in their relation to academia, state, and civil society in Turkey.
Panel I:

Constitutionalism, Law, and Democracy in Turkey

Chair: Urszula Woźniak (Humboldt-Universität zu Berlin), Maria Abad Andrade (Humboldt-Universität zu Berlin), Ece Göztepe (Bilkent University), Silvia von Steinsdorff (Humboldt-Universität zu Berlin), Ertuğ Tombuş (Humboldt-Universität zu Berlin), İrem Tuncer-Ebetürk (WZB Berlin Social Science Center)

The panel will discuss some of the predominant research results obtained within the scope of the Research Lab: Constitutional Politics in Turkey. The contributions of the panellists focus on the political role, jurisdiction and decision-making processes of the Turkish Constitutional Court, constitution-making practices as well as the instrumentalisation of obsolete laws as legal devices of democratic decay.

Silvia von Steinsdorff and Ece Göztepe will present their forthcoming book which scrutinises the political role of the Constitutional Court. It analyses the Court’s jurisdiction over the last 60 years and relates it to current political developments in Turkey. Maria Abad Andrade will discuss her forthcoming book on decision-making practices at constitutional courts and on the Turkish Constitutional Court in particular, focusing on the largely unexplored practice of dissenting opinions at the court. Ertuğ Tombuş will examine the constitution-making practices in the history of the Turkish Republic to provide an alternative explanation for the authoritarian foundations of Turkish constitutions that breaks with well-established explanations such as the center-periphery dichotomy or military tutelage argument. Finally, the research lab fellow İrem Ebetürk will shed a light on the particularly high rise of insult proceedings that followed Erdoğan’s election as president, thereby problematising the particular role of the insult law in current Turkish politics as a reflection of Turkey’s democratic backsliding.
Panel II:
A Contested Relationship – Narratives in EU/German-Turkish Relations Three Years on

Chair: Anke Schönlau (University of Cologne), Senem Aydîn-Düzgit (Istanbul Policy Center), Funda Tekin (Institute for European Politics)
Discussants: Moritz Rau (University of Cologne), Özgehan Şenyuva (Middle East Technical University), Wolfgang Wessels (University of Cologne)

When the research project TRIANGLE started its work in 2017, Turkey’s relations with Germany and the European Union were a major topic of discussion. In light of the Gezi protests, the coup attempt, the state of emergency, the constitutional referendum in Turkey and bilateral conflicts on elections campaigns, German-Turkish relations had hit rock bottom.
Meanwhile, with the EU-Turkey statement of March 2016, publicly known as the ‘Refugee deal’, a new path of cooperation between the EU and Turkey was established.

Three years on, TRIANGLE has investigated the development of narratives and institutions in EU/German-Turkish relations over the project’s course. The panel will discuss the preliminary findings based on narrative analyses of different actors in the EU/German-Turkish triangular relationship and their implications for institutional scenarios. Narratives – understood as stories people tell to describe themselves or others – may be precursors to institutional changes and arrangements. The EU-Turkey relations experts, Project Director Dr. Funda Tekin and guest speaker Associate Prof. Dr. Señem Aydın-Düzgit, will share their thoughts on TRIANGLE’s findings, and engage in discussion with the project’s researchers and the audience.
Panel III:

What moves Women’s and Gender Studies at Universities in Turkey?
Dynamics of Institutionalisation

Chair: Yasemin Karakaşoğlu (University of Bremen),
Charlotte Binder (University of Bremen), Deniz Dağ
(University of Bremen), Sevgi Uçan Çubukçu
(formerly Istanbul University)
Discussant: Betül Yarar (University of Bremen)

In this panel, the research team presents their most striking findings from the analysis of empirical data collected in the framework of the project ‘Women’s and Gender Studies at Universities in Turkey: Institutionalisation and Transformation’. Yasemin Karakaşoğlu will introduce the team, the project and its progress, and give an introduction to the ‘velvet triangle’ concept developed by Alison Woodward in 2001 that is used as an analytical lens in the analysis of the institutionalisation and transformation processes of Women’s and Gender Studies Centres. Next, Sevgi Uçan Çubukçu will present the main characteristics and dynamics of academic structures revealed through expert interviews. Subsequently, Charlotte Binder will talk about the shifts in paradigms in the field of Women’s and Gender Studies. Last, Deniz Dağ will underline and pinpoint national and international developments influential in the institutionalisation and transformation processes of the centres. Finally, the project’s prime consultant Betül Yarar will discuss and evaluate the project before asking the audience to join the discussion.
Einstein Fellows Research Group Panel:

Reflections on Authoritarian Governance

Chair: Sinem Adar (Centre for Applied Turkey Studies, SWP), Gülçin Balamir Coşkun (Humboldt-Universität zu Berlin), Tuba İnal-Çekiç (Humboldt-Universität zu Berlin), Ayşegül Kars Kaynar (Humboldt-Universität zu Berlin), Zeynep Kivilcim (Humboldt-Universität zu Berlin)
The panel hosts four Einstein Fellows who are currently based at the Institute for Social Sciences at Humboldt-Universität zu Berlin and working on different dimensions of authoritarianism in Turkey. The panel discussion focuses on institutional, political and legal aspects of authoritarianism at different scales. Based on their research areas, fellows will share their reflections on the implications of authoritarian governance for urban governance, media, law, and civil-military relations. The discussion aims to open up an inter-disciplinary space for thinking together these pressing questions of our time.
Panel IV:
‘Ne mutlu ateistim diyene’* Atheism & The Politics of Culture in Contemporary Turkey

Pierre Hecker (University of Marburg)
Ivo Furman (Istanbul Bilgi University)
Kaya Akyıldız (Bahçeşehir University)
Discussant: Ayşe Çavdar (University of Marburg)

In this panel results of the research project “Ne mutlu ateistim diyene’ Atheism & The Politics of Culture in Contemporary Turkey” will be discussed. The project investigated contemporary discourses on atheism in Turkey. The relevance of this subject must be seen in the context of Turkey's currently ongoing Kulturkampf. For a considerable period of time now, the country’s ruling elite has been striving to establish its culture of a pious conservatism as the commonly accepted norm in order to consolidate its power in state and society. Morally and religiously sensitive topics such as nudity, sexuality, alcohol consumption, evolutionary theory, or criticism of religion have increasingly been systematically banned from education and the media, while at the same time religious education has been strengthened by the state and religious references have grown more visible in politics and society. The self-declared goal of educating a new, pious generation is contesting the current model of Turkish secularism and the concept of national identity that derived from it. Individual human rights guaranteed by the constitution – in this case namely the freedom of belief and conscience and the freedom of and from religion – seem to face increasing pressure due to the latest developments. The public visibility of non-religious, atheist lifestyles poses a challenge to the cultural hegemony of pious conservatism and therefore the claim to power of the ruling elite. Demanding public space, consequently, can be an efficient means to lay claim to political power. In this sense, atheism is studied as part of a (counter)hegemonic discourse on the Politics of Culture.

* “Happy is the one who calls himself an atheist.” Adaption of the phrase “Ne mutlu Türküm diyene” (“Happy is the one who calls himself a Turk”), which goes back to Mustafa Kemal Atatürk. Until a few years ago, Mustafa Kemal’s words have been an integral part of the Turkish Student Oath. In its function as a pledge of allegiance to the Turkish nation, the phrase has to be considered politically sensitive; not only as a reference to Mustafa Kemal, but as a symbol for the denial of cultural pluralism in Turkey.
Panel V: Development of Social Rights in Turkey

Chair: Lutz Leisering (University of Bielefeld),
Tolga Bölükbaşı (Bilkent University),
Kerem Öktem (University of Bielefeld)
Discussant: İpek Göçmen (Max Planck Institute for the Study of Societies)

In this panel, the results of the research project ‘How “social” is Turkey? Turkey’s social security system in a European context’ will be discussed. The project explored Turkey’s changing social policy landscape over the past four decades. Combining quantitative and qualitative research methods to generate original data, the project aimed to understand to what extent the Turkish state assumes a collective responsibility for the well-being of all citizens through providing social security programs in health, pensions, social assistance and unemployment protec-
Changes in social policies thoroughly affect people’s lives, but Turkish social policy rarely figures into European political debates, especially as the recent political developments in Turkey tend to eclipse more mundane topics like social protections. The panel will include presentations on how Turkey’s social security system compares to European social security systems in terms of social spending and social citizenship, and on developments in particular policy areas like social assistance and unemployment protection.
Since the failed coup attempt of July 15th, 2016, Turkey’s constitutional politics have been in turmoil. Following the state of emergency that had been in force for two years since the coup attempt, numerous executive decrees were issued causing the suspension and dismissal of tens of thousands of civil servants and leading to the partial suspension of the rule of law. This rule by decree has had massive political and social consequences. The implications of these processes in terms of constitutional politics are wide-reaching.

The 2017 constitutional changes and their making during the state of emergency form the point of departure for the work of the “Research Lab: Constitutional Politics in Turkey”. In separate studies conducted in parallel, researchers of the lab from Germany and Turkey analyse the development of the state under the rule of law in Turkey and the diverse challenges it faces from various disciplinary, methodical and thematic angles.

Apart from the failure of the constitution-making process (2011-2013), the analysis of latest constitutional debates amongst others with regards to gender politics and referendums, formed the core of the research lab’s first phase. Picking up on this, in its second phase the research lab includes actors and institutions outside the constitution-making in the strict sense. A particular focus is on changes to the rule of law under authoritarian and populist regimes and the wide-reaching effects of the state of emergency. Forms and conditions of parliamentary work, both in present and past, as well as practices of jurisprudence concerning freedom of speech are some of the research subjects in this phase.

The analysis of these aspects allows for deeper insights into Turkey’s political processes at the crossroads between democracy and authoritarianism, and offers many starting points for comparative research: The developments in Turkey are compared to other cases historically, regionally and in a problem-related manner. Through regular research lab meetings and the research lab’s webpage (https://www.cpt.hu-berlin.de), members of the research lab present their work. Public lectures in Berlin offer insights into the lab and its work to the wider public on a quarterly basis.

Research Lab Fellows:
Since 2017, the following fellows joined the research lab with the following projects:

8 post-doctoral fellows:
Aylin Aydin (Yeditepe University): The Impact of Court Packing on De Facto
13—15 Nov 2019

Judicial Independence in Turkey and Hungary.
Grażyna Baranowksa (Polish Academy of Sciences): Memory laws in Turkey
İrem Ebetürk (WZB) & Defne Över (Göttingen University): Deployment of the Insult Law in Personalization of Power
Emine Rezzan Karaman (Bilgi University): Saturday Mother’s Struggle at the European Court of Justice
İlker Gökhan Şen, (Zürich University)
Sezen Yaraş (Bilkent University): Gender and the Politics of Constitution Making Process in Turkey

3 Ph.D. fellows:
Mustafa Mert Alpaz (Bilkent University):
Melis Laebens (Yale University): Leaders with Hegemonic Aspirations
Cem Tecimer (Harvard University): The Rise of Executive Constitutional Interpretation

2 M.A. fellows:
Mariana Karkoutly, (Humboldt-Universität zu Berlin): Syrians in Diaspora seeking for Justice
Mithat Kemal İman, (Middle East Technical University, Humboldt-Universität zu Berlin): Constitution-making in Turkey, Civil Society and the Welfare State.

Publications

Articles in Journals/Edited Volumes

Books

• Yanaşmayan, Zeynep and Petersen, Felix (eds.) (forthcoming) Regressing Towards Constitutional Autocracy? The Failing of Popular Constitution
• Alpbaz, Mustafa Mert, and Göztepe, Ece (eds.) (2017) Anayasa Mahkemesine Bireysel Başvuru Türkiye Uygulamasının Almanya ve Strazburg Ekseninde Karşılaştırılması [Constitutional Complaint to the Constitutional Court. The Turkish Case in Comparison with Strasbourg and Germany]. Ankara: On İki Levha Yayıncılık.

Op-Eds and Interviews

• Akal, Değer (ed.) (2019) Alman uzman von Steinsdorff: Türkiye’de anayasal kriz yaşanıyor [Interview with Prof. Dr. Silvia von Steinsdorff on Istanbul elections], Homepage: Deutsche Welle Türkiye. URL: https://www.dw.com/tr/alman-uzman-von-steinsdorff-t%C3%BCrkiye-de-anayasal-kriz-ya%C5%9Fan%C4%B1yor/a-48724288-0 (accessed: 23.10.2019).
• Welty, Ute (2018) Wahlen in Russland [Interview with Silvia von Steinsdorff], Homepage: Deutschlandfunk Kultur. URL: https://www.deutschland-
Rights and equality in contemporary Turkey

PhD Publications

How ‘social’ is Turkey?
Turkey’s social security system in a European context

Project Team: Lutz Leisering, Tolga Bölükbaşı, Kerem Gabriel Öktem
Research Assistant: Cansu Erdoğan

The research project ‘How “social” is Turkey? Turkey’s social security system in a European context’ explored Turkey’s changing social policy landscape over the past four decades. Combining quantitative and qualitative research methods to generate original data, the project aimed to understand to what extent the Turkish state assumes a collective responsibility for the well-being of all citizens through providing social security programs in health, pensions, social assistance and unemployment protection. Changes in social policies thoroughly affect people’s lives, but Turkish social policy rarely figures into European political debates, especially since the recent political developments in Turkey tend to eclipse more mundane topics like social protections.
In the course of the project, the research team concentrated on a number of issues. We asked how Turkey’s social security system compares to other systems in European and other countries in terms of welfare effort and welfare commitment.

For this purpose, we analysed developments in social spending and social citizenship. We also aimed to understand what happened in key policy areas: How did health, pension, social assistance and unemployment protection policies develop over time? Additionally, we tried to uncover underlying ideas – such as policy paradigms, frames and discourses – that couched and legitimated major social legislation. Finally, we tried to understand who supported and who opposed key government initiatives in social security.

Our research produced rich but also ambivalent findings. With regards to the levels of social spending and the extent of social rights provided by the state, we observed that Turkey has been involved in a slow but remarkable catch-up process. Since 1945 when the first nationwide social security policies for the private sector started, there has been a steady increase in the number of social risks against which people are protected, the number of people covered by social security, and the budget that the state devotes to these purposes. Yet compared to European welfare states, the country remains a welfare laggard with relatively lower expenditures, lower welfare generosity and more people left unprotected.

In specific areas of social policy, we observed profound changes. In the field of unemployment protection, Turkey crucially created an unemployment insurance system in 1999. Yet this insurance pays relatively meagre benefits to a small share of the unemployed, and thus, the unemployment insurance fund amasses a steady surplus. In recent years, this surplus has been used to finance an ever-changing range of policies. With regards to social assistance, the state has recently institutionalised this policy area, creating a dozen new programmes and starting to pay more generous benefits for specific groups. As a result, Turkey today has an elaborate social assistance regime, albeit a deeply fragmented one which excludes some groups among the poor.

In healthcare, Turkey has succeeded in unifying a system that was deeply fragmented based on occupational status. At the same time, the state fostered the private healthcare sector through private health insurance and private hospitals. This privatisation process resulted in a new kind of fragmentation based on income. Finally, as a pension-heavy system, pensions have long been at the heart of Turkey’s welfare state. The country devotes a higher share of its social budget to pensions than any other European welfare state. Despite successive cost-cutting reforms since 1999, the pension system remains comparatively generous.

In a nutshell, ‘How “social” is Turkey?’ documents significant changes in many aspects of social policy. But what were the driving forces behind these changes? Many significant policy shifts, such as the unification of healthcare or the institutionalisation of social assistance, had actually been long planned by the state bureaucracy. Still, governments had been unwilling or unable to implement them. With the support of international organisations, including the World Bank, successive single-party Justice and Development Party (AKP) governments managed to push forward these radical policy shifts. In some cases, we find that these changes are also linked to policy paradigms that inform policymakers. For instance, the idiosyncratic nature of Turkey’s social assistance regime can be better understood if one explores the long-held belief in conservative circles in the special place of charity in Turkish and Islamic history. However, some of these developments seem to also be political responses to electoral pressures. A case in point is the government’s recent changes to pension policy to increase benefit generosity significantly just before the last general elections in 2018.
Rights and equality in contemporary Turkey

Our findings on the drivers of policy-level change provide leads for focuses of future research. First, the ideational underpinnings of Turkey’s changing welfare regime need to be better understood. As our analysis of social assistance has shown, the peculiarities of the regime are tied to broader political discourses and Turkish sociocultural legacies. This might also be the case in other policy areas. Second, research on developments of policies need to be linked more closely to politics. As the example of pensions shows, governments often provide benefits to receive popular support. It follows to ask in what ways Turkey’s changing social policies are linked to its changing political regime. Is the expansion of social policy, which we have seen in recent decades, in fact connected to democratic backsliding? All of these topics, we submit, would be significant for future research on the Turkish welfare state.

Publications

Women’s and Gender Studies at Universities in Turkey: Institutionalisation and Transformation

Project Team: Yasemin Karakaşoğlu, Charlotte Binder, Deniz Dağ, Sevgi Uçan Çubukçu
Student assistant: Nora Keykan
Former student assistants: Refiye Ellek, Ayşe Ertaş, Ulrike Zepke

Following the wave of the feminist movement in the 1980s, women’s studies as an independent academic discipline became established in the early 1990s at universities in Istanbul and Ankara. The founders were academics who were mostly involved in women’s movements.

By the year 2017, about one hundred Women’s and Gender Studies Centres (WGSCs) at public and foundation universities existed in Turkey, both in larger and smaller cities. Out of these centres, thirteen WGSCs are included in the research sample for this study based on specific criteria. The research project examines the institutionalisation and transformation processes of WGSCs at universities in their relation to academia, state and civil society in Turkey. To this end, the project utilises the ‘velvet triangle’, developed by Alison Woodward to conceptualise women’s policy networks and to provide an analytical perspective.

Based on expert interviews and document collections, the project investigates the statements, websites, activities – such as teaching, research, publications and events, as well as institutional documents from representatives of the selected WGSCs that provide insight into their academic and political motivations. The field is above and beyond the centres but embraces the centres as an institutional form and practice. Centres in this case become just one lens through which to examine the overall picture of women’s and gender studies (WGS).

Our research focus concerns ‘Application and Research Centres’, which are not only the first institutional models through which WGS entered into academia since the early 1990s, but are also dynamic institutional, academic spaces constituted through ongoing contestations among the state, academia and civil society. By focusing on WGSCs in this research, we attempt to explore the ways in which these important institutional units have been established and transformed on the basis of continuing struggles among different influential actors and institutions.

We have several subsequent questions concerning this general process of institutional formation and transformation of WGSCs: What kinds of support and barriers did WGSCs face since their foundations? To what extent have women’s movements been and continue to be references to institutionalised WGS? What are the impacts and repercussions of changes in national and international political conjunctures on these centres?

Our study shows that WGS scholars demanded the establishment and struggled for the foundation of the centres. The generation of scholars responsible for their development provided future scholars with the visibility and legitimacy of an autonomous academic discipline with different institutional models. Despite the lack of resources, there has been a considerable amount of literature developed in the field of WGS. On the other hand, changes in activities and discourses, and differences in content and approaches in education and research pose new threats to the field. These developments raise the question: Has there been a critical epistemological break in WGS at universities?

The material analysis recognises different paradigms adopted by WGSCs: modernism, feminism and neoconservatism. Furthermore, we discovered that a predominant political-ideological homogeneity within individual WGSCs does not exist. The selection of the centres’ names, topics and terms, such as ‘gender equality’ instead of ‘gender justice’, indicates the WGSCs’ different approaches to women and gender. Paradigm shifts can be explained through generational belonging, the meaning of academic feminism, the debates within the WGS community worldwide, and the impacts of the civil society and the state.

WGSCs and women’s movements in Turkey – as the most prominent civil society actors for the centres – have a close and mutual relationship. In our sample, this closeness was especially strong in civil society organisations with Kemalist, feminist or religious-conservative orientations, and less strong within the LGBTI+ and Kurdish women’s movements.

During our study, experts tagged several nationally and internationally influential actors, processes and institutions that have been critical for the institutionalisation and transformation processes of WGSCs. Accordingly, the immense importance of the international network in which Turkey is situated and the changing domestic political climate for the establishment and further development of these academic entities were proven. We draw three main conclusions out of this connection. From the late 1980s to the early 2000s, international conjuncture was the dominant political factor in the institutionalisation processes of the centres: CEDAW, the Beijing Conference of the UN, the EU and the Istanbul Convention. In the post-2010 period, the influence of international conjuncture was gradually replaced by the conjuncture created by the developments in the domestic politics of Turkey: the Approach Document on Gender Equality by the Council of Higher Education, the AKP government’s gender policies, the Peace Petition and the state of emergency. In the period from 2017 to 2018, a new institutional landscape for the WGSCs presented two important developments. First, the ‘intellectual shrinkage of WGS’ despite the numerical expansion of the centres, occurred in terms of personnel and intellectual formation and freedom. Second, the WGS scholars started working to maintain the status quo of the centres. In that sense, WGSCs are ‘in retreat and preserve’ to protect the field and its institutional space from further shrinkage.
Rights and equality in contemporary Turkey

As the research team, we suggest that the following issues need to be addressed and looked into further in their respective research areas:

• The wider implications of the Peace Petition and state of emergency processes on the continuation of WGS research and teaching.
• The state-based agents and mechanisms of familialism in the transformation of WGSCs today.
• The impacts of higher education policies on WGSCs in times of neoliberalism and neoconservatism.
Project’s additional activities:
In the framework of the project, lectures on WGS, including the summer school Women’s and Gender Studies in Turkey: The Past, Present and Future in July 2019, were implemented. Additionally, the exhibition entitled Courageous Women: Women’s and Gender Studies in Turkey’s Academia was developed and displayed in Istanbul in the Spring of 2019) and Bremen in the Summer of 2019.

Publications

Articles in Journals/Edited Volumes

Books

Working papers/Conference papers

- Dağ, Deniz (2018, September) State and Academy Relations: Transformation of Women's and Gender Studies at Universities in Turkey. Working and conference paper presented at the Türkologentag, GTOT, University of Bamberg, Germany.

• Binder, Charlotte (2017, June) Institutionalization and Transformation of Women’s and Gender Studies at Universities in Turkey. Working and conference paper presented at the conference: Current Transformations of Gender Studies and Gender Regimes in Turkey, Carl von Ossietzky University of Oldenburg, Germany.

Rights and equality in contemporary Turkey
TRIANGLE – Blickwechsel in EU/German-Turkish Relations Beyond Conflicts. Towards a Unique Partnership for a Contemporary Turkey?

Project Team: Wolfgang Wessels, Atila Eralp, Ardahan Özkan Gedikli, Anke Schönlau, Mirja Schröder, Nurdan Selay Bedir, Özgehan Şenyuva, Funda Tekin
Student assistant: Denise Ersoy
Former student assistants: Eva Binkert, Laura Gather, Sophie Irmey, Helena Weise

Summary of the project’s ideas and implementation

Turkey and Europe share a long history. Through Turkey’s membership in NATO and the Council of Europe as well as the association agreement and the accession process, Turkey and the EU have established many cooperation and communication channels. Turkey plays an important role for the EU, especially in the fields of migration, security, energy, economic and foreign policy. Germany, in turn, has been an important actor within the relationship of Turkey and the EU, especially since Turkey has expressed its aspiration to become a full member of the EU. Both countries are closely interlinked through the large population of people of Turkish origin living in Germany and tight trade relations. Assuming that German-Turkish relations significantly influence EU-Turkey relations, the TRIANGLE research project investigates the triangular relationship between Turkey, Germany and the EU. The project is a cooperation between the Centre for Turkey and EU-Studies (CETEUS) of the University of Cologne and the Middle East Technical University (METU) in Ankara.

Institutional mapping and narratives

TRIANGLE examined the institutional architecture of the EU, Turkey and Germany and traced the dominant narratives for the EU-Turkey relationship. On the basis of the findings, the project assessed three future scenarios: the resumption of the accession process; the establishment of a unique partnership between the EU and Turkey; and the institutional stagnation and increasingly conflict-ridden relationship with Turkey as a ‘difficult partner’.

The project traced the development of different frameworks of institutional relations and cooperation – such as the accession process itself, bilateral summits, meetings at high political level and dialogues on specific policies – against the background of historical institutionalism and path dependencies that helped to understand policy decisions. To further examine the triangular relationship, the project conducted a narrative analysis of the German Parliament, the German government, the EU institutions and the Turkish presidency with the aim of identifying and comparing narratives in the political discourse. The project understands narratives as collective stories or interpretations that have a constituting influence on the reality we perceive. This way, narratives may be both interpreted as a person’s understanding of reality as well as part of a (justification) strategy to achieve certain goals.

Research results and future scenarios

TRIANGLE reflects the developments and narratives while addressing potential future scenarios of EU-Turkey relations. Firstly, from an institutional perspective, a functional relationship in fields of common interests is possible and may provide a short-term effective model. In the long run, the EU and Turkey should aim for a rules-based cooperation to realise common action in fields of global importance where interests do not necessarily converge. Nevertheless, the accession process remains in place as both actors seem to be locked into the accession path for various reasons.

Applying the narrative approach, the Gezi protests of 2013 constituted a turning point in the German Parliament’s narrative on Turkey. Members of Parliament criticised the Turkish Government and started to describe Turkey as an unpredictable actor. In the wake of the EU-Turkey Statement on migration, the Joint Action Plan and 2016 as a distinct year of bilateral crisis, MPs across parties tend to agree on what TRIANGLE calls a ‘twin-track strategy’: while a true accession perspective for Turkey to the EU seems no longer to be valid, the accession path is seen as a means of interim solution to build up new perspectives or partnership models.

The European Council and, respectively, the EU Leaders present an ambivalent agenda: Ankara is both “moving away from the European Union” and a “key strategic partner”. The discussion on migration in 2015 and related joint actions brought fresh impetus to the partnership. Yet in 2019, Turkey’s ongoing offshore activities in relation to the Cyprus conflict caused another cooling-off and the decision to halt high-level meetings for the time being.
Turkish President Recep Tayyip Erdoğan’s narration of the triangular relationship is multi-faced; dependent on historic, contextual and conjunctural conditions; and is characterised by ambivalence – political reproaches and calls for economic cooperation are both present. Comparison and competition between Germany and Turkey are important elements of the President’s speeches. Moreover, while 2013 already constituted a turning point in German narratives, the Turkish President changed his narrative only in 2016 in view of the geopolitical relevance of Turkey for Germany through cooperation on migration and the continued criticism of Turkey’s human rights situation.

Drawing from the narrative and institutional analysis of the EU-German-Turkish TRIANGLE, the years between 2013 and 2016 constitute the latest turning point. Narrations on the other’s political being are increasingly characterised by conflict, while initiatives and aims to cooperate independently from the accession framework are increasingly present. Consequently, the project argues that some sort of intensive, unique partnership is a likely future scenario as political tensions might continue.

Outlook

TRIANGLE’s research has shown how powerful narratives are used by different actors to push political agendas. The turning points identified that led to changing narratives and institutional strategies were events which deeply affected actor’s understanding of each other on a geostrategic or political level. Major events may be expected to be the next game changer – Brexit could be one, both on an institutional level and in terms of geopolitical perceptions and narrations. A new partnership structure between the EU and Turkey, regardless of its final constituents, may produce new mutual narratives that should be closely followed.
Contemporary EU-Turkey relations also raise the question as to whether the EU’s slowed enlargement effort requires more studies about the EU’s differentiated neighbourhood. In the wake of the EU’s establishment of the Permanent Structured Cooperation (PESCO), it remains furthermore to be seen to what extent Turkey will be integrated into the EU’s security structure.

Publications

Articles in Journals/Edited Volumes

Books

The Politics of Culture in ‘New Turkey’

One of the main outcomes of our research is the upcoming book The Politics of Culture in ‘New Turkey’, which investigates the (counter)hegemonic discourses and practices on culture in present-day Turkey. Over the past decade, Turkey has witnessed an ideological transition negotiated within the realm of culture and facilitated by modern-day myths working to persuade the public into acknowledging the ruling elite’s claim to power. In their attempt to create a ‘New Turkey’, Recep Tayyip Erdoğan’s governing Justice and Development Party (AKP) has positioned Islam at the forefront of (re)inventing Turkish national identity while at the same time putting considerable effort into constructing and claiming ownership of a new national narrative that seeks to glorify and idolise the Ottoman past. In Erdogan’s ‘New Turkey’, Islam and Ottomanism are two sides of the same coin. Both represent evidence of the ruling elite’s will to establish a new form of cultural hegemony and to entrench its political power over state and society.

The ruling elite’s strategy of containment is twofold. It consists of the attempt to generate consensus through enforcing its vision of a ‘New Turkey’ as the commonly accepted norm and, at the same time, of the ability to use conflict as an effective tool of societal polarisation and an instrument to weaken and stigmatise those who are different and do not conform to the ideological precepts of pious conservatism. The regime’s effort to rewrite Turkish public memory by promoting its (ideological) narratives through TV series, movies, propaganda videos, school curricula and material culture in urban public spaces, leaves little room for alternative interpretations and cultural difference. Considering president Erdoğan’s unrestrained monopoly on power and the restraints on the freedom of (cultural) expression, this process of cultural transformation is most likely to further accelerate.

The Politics of Culture in ‘New Turkey’ seeks to expose the strategy of Turkey’s ruling elite to obtain cultural hegemony and to explore the tactics of cultural resistance developed by the politically weak to counter the ruling elite’s dominant culture of pious conservatism. It explores how the AKP’s cultural policies are reshaping the everyday lives of Turkish citizens; how changing dynamics of dominance and power are transforming the cultural and social representations in Turkish society; how the spheres of freedom of expression and cultural diversity intersect; and in what way the vision of a ‘New Turkey’ is narrated to embody, reproduce, accommodate and (re) invent conservative culture in everyday life. Key themes include subculture and the politics of lifestyle, mediating neo-Ottomanism in popular culture, satire and agitprop in ‘New Turkey’, civil society and the politics of gender, and ‘New Turkey’s ethno-religious others.

Working with an international team of young, upcoming researchers, our book is the product of several academic workshops and conference panels. Some highlights include Ivo Furman’s ‘Battling over the spirit of a nation: attitudes towards alcohol in “New Turkey”’; Ayşe Çavdar’s ‘Never walk alone: politics of unveiling in “New Turkey”’; Josh Carney’s ‘Democra-Z: election ads, a failed coup, and zombie politics in “New Turkey”’; Douglas Mattsson’s ‘Spreading VX-Gas over Kaaba: Islamic semiotics in Turkish black metal’; and Can Evren’s ‘United against the referee: projecting the nation through soccer in “New Turkey”’. The volume will be available in early 2020.

Atheism, Deism, and Non-belief in ‘New Turkey’
Based on a nationwide ‘Religious Life Survey’ conducted in 2014, the Turkish Directorate of Religious Affairs placed the number of Turkish citizens who profess Islam at 99.2 percent. The ontological security provided by this number was recently challenged and contradicted by a survey from the polling firm KONDA. Its findings, published in January 2019, suggest that the number of ‘atheists and non-believers’ in Turkey has more than doubled over the past decade and now constitutes five percent of the population. This dispute over statistics was furthermore preceded by a controversy over the alleged rise of deism and a new wave of secularism spreading among conservative youths. Well-known conservative intellectuals and theologists such as Necdet Subaşı and Ayşe Böhürler raised concerns over the spread of ‘religious fatigue’ among Turkey’s younger generation. Against this backdrop, the present research team consisting of Pierre Hecker, Kaya Akyıldız and Ivo Furman conducted research on the discourse over atheism, deism and non-belief in ‘New Turkey’.

Leaving Islam is a highly controversial issue in Turkish society and those who publicly profess their atheist identity are frequently subject to discrimination and hate speech. The ruling elite’s attempt to establish a new hegemonic project based on the idea of pious conservatism has further contributed to perpetuating the already volatile situation of those who claim their right to freedom from religion. Although it has forced many non-believers into hiding, the rise of pious conservatism has also triggered an awakening of atheist activism and yielded the formation of Turkey's first ever Atheism Association. Based on a set of biographical interviews, Pierre Hecker’s research focuses on individuals’ stories of becoming atheists. The results derived from these interviews reveal a surprisingly heterogenous picture and involve individuals from secular and pious conservative sections of Turkish society. While some of the interviewees had not been socialised into religion at any point during their lives, others described their loss of faith as a result of intellectual engagement with religious sources or even as a direct reaction to the political abuse of religion at the hands of the present government and its supporters.

Within a context where public discussions on organised atheism or the right to freedom from religion are frowned upon and considered taboo, Ivo Furman looked at how Twitter can play a role in facilitating free speech and the expression of counter-hegemonic discourses. Amidst rumours that deism was becoming popular amongst students attending Imam Hatip religious schools in Turkey, the head of the Ministry for Religious Affairs declared such forms of faith to be socially deviant. Soon afterwards, Twitter was abuzz with responses to the controversial statement. Presenting from a dataset of 21,674 tweets, Furman argues that Twitter briefly hosted an ‘intimate public’, a confessional space for the gesticulation of unconventional religious identities.

The ruling elite’s hegemonic project furthermore seeks to affirm a Sunni supremacist vision of Turkish ethno-religious identity. However, the origins and politics of this Sunni supremacist ‘New Turkey’ are widely ignored. Kaya Akyıldız investigated the fields where Sunni identity is reiterated through certain policies, discourses and performative acts. In doing so, he relied on an extensive body of media sources and a theoretically-directed, critical survey of secondary literature on ‘New Turkey’. He also undertook a thorough historical analysis of archived and published documents produced by selected state institutions, private organisations and international institutions. Based on the results of this research, it appears safe to say that the ruling elite’s ambitions for cultural hegemony have triggered a new secularist movement from below whose intellectual roots no longer lie in the Kemalist past alone.

Publications

Working papers/Conference papers

- Furman, Ivo (2019, October) Conspiracy, Heresy or Secularization? Mapping the Turkish Deism Controversy on Twitter. Workshop presentation, Orient Institut Istanbul, Turkey.
- Akyıldız, Kaya (2018, November) Between Fellow Brethren and Blasphe-

• Akyıldız, Kaya (2018, February) Advantageous, Privileged, and Hegemonic: A Sketch of Legal/Institutional, Political and Cultural Limits of Sunni Supremacism in Contemporary Turkey. Workshop presentation at the CNMS Marburg, Germany.

• Hecker, Pierre (2017, May) Die Situation türkischer Universitäten im Ausnahmezustand. Workshop and panel discussion “Ausnahmezustand als Normalzustand?”, RLS, Marburg, Germany.

Articles in Journals/Edited Volumes

Rights and equality in contemporary Turkey
CONFERENCE PARTICIPANTS
Sinem Adar

has received a PhD degree (2014) in Sociology from Brown University and a MSc degree (2005) in Development Studies from the London School of Economics. Dr. Adar’s research examines struggles over the parameters of inclusion into and exclusion from the political community, and how they shape and are shaped by identification processes. In her dissertation, she has analyzed the emigration of non-Muslims from the once religiously heterogenous cities of Istanbul and Alexandria while religion became a crucial category in the making of the Turkish and Egyptian national communities. Her work based on this research has so far appeared at various outlets such the Political Power and Social Theory and Sociological Forum. She also writes op-ed pieces that have so far appeared at Jadaliyya, Open Democracy and ReSet Doc.

Maria Abad Andrade

(née Haimerl) holds a MA in Political Science from Humboldt-Universität zu Berlin, Freie Universität Berlin and University of Potsdam and a BA in Social Sciences from Heinrich-Heine-University Düsseldorf. She obtained her PhD in Political Science from Humboldt-Universität zu Berlin. During her studies she spent one semester at Boğaziçi University in Istanbul. Her primary research and teaching areas constitutional politics, transformation and democratization, institutions, especially constitutional courts and Turkish politics. Her PhD deals with decision-making by constitutional courts, especially the Turkish Constitutional Court.
is an assistant professor at the Department of Sociology at Istanbul Bahçeşehir University. He holds a PhD in Philosophy, Interpretation and Culture from Binghamton University. Alongside his published articles and book chapters, he is currently working on two book projects. Dr. Akyıldız’s research has been supported by numerous institutions including Stiftung Mercator and The Scientific and Technological Research Council of Turkey (TÜBİTAK). He has completed two research projects, ‘Cognitive Political Maps of Politicians in Turkey: Consensus, Exceptions and Red Lines’ and ‘Contemporary Political Memory in Turkey: Intersections, Antinomies, and Parallelisms’, which discuss the meaning of being Sunni, Turkish and male, and the limits of tolerance for non-Turks, non-Sunnis female and LGBTi people in contemporary Turkish society.
Senem Aydin-Düzgit

is Associate Professor of International Relations at the Faculty of Arts and Social Sciences of Sabancı University in Istanbul, a Senior Scholar and the Research and Academic Affairs Coordinator at Istanbul Policy Center (IPC). Her main research interests include European foreign policy, Turkish foreign policy, EU-Turkey relations, discourse studies and identity in international relations, in particular in European foreign policy. She is a member of the ECFR Council and a board member of the Centre for Economic and Foreign Policy Studies, the Global Relations Forum and the Carnegie Rising Democracies Network. Senem Aydin Düzgit holds a Master of Science from the London School of Economics and Political Science and received her PhD from Vrije University in Brussels.
received her undergraduate degree from Galatasaray University and MA degree from University Paris I-Panthéon-Sorbonne. She obtained her PhD degree from International Relations Program at Istanbul University. Her research focuses on authoritarianism, democratic theory, political violence and refugee crisis. Her last article with Aslı Yılmaz Uçar on local responses to the Syrian refugee movement has been recently published in Movements - Journal for Critical Migration and Border Regime Studies. She actually works as Einstein Fellow at the Institut für Sozialwissenschaften, Humboldt-Universität zu Berlin.
Anne Berger

is the coordinator of Humboldt University’s Einstein Fellows Research Group and lecturer of the Programme “German Turkish Master for Social Sciences”. She hold a M.A. degree from METU in Ankara and HU Berlin. Her MA Thesis was published with the title “The Community of Academics for Peace in Germany” (2018).
Charlotte Binder

works as an academic researcher in the project ‘Women’s and Gender Studies at Universities in Turkey’ at the University of Bremen in the Unit for Intercultural Education.

Binder earned a master’s degree in history and cultural studies from Bremen University in 2009 and specialised in women’s and gender studies; higher education studies; social movement studies; contemporary Turkey studies; and qualitative research methods. In her doctoral thesis, Binder compared the (im)possibility of coalitions among multiple women’s and gender-based political actors in Berlin and Istanbul through an empirical study. Additionally, with her research team, she conducted the project ‘Comparing Women’s Movements in Different Cities in Turkey’ from 2014 to 2017 and co-founded the researcher network Intersectional Diversity Studies in 2010 at the University of Bremen. In addition to her monograph International Women’s Day after the Deconstruction of Gender published in 2017, Binder’s articles and book chapters deal with women’s and gender movements; studies and politics in Turkey and Germany; coalition building; and gender concepts.
Tolga Bölükbaşı

has been an assistant professor of political science and public administration at Bilkent University since 2009. His research interests include the Europeanisation of socio-economic governance in Southern Europe and mapping Turkey within the varieties of welfare states. Bölükbaşı has published research on Europeanisation, welfare state reform and the conceptualisation of social rights. He has headed several research projects, including most recently ‘Mapping the Turkish Welfare State’, funded by the Scientific and Technological Research Council of Turkey (TUBITAK). This project generated quantitative data on the Turkish case in order to put Turkey’s social security system into comparative perspective. Bölükbaşı is currently working on a book on the comparative political economy of welfare state reform during the Maastricht decade.
Ayşe Çavdar

is a journalist and academic who graduated from the Department of Journalism at Ankara University. She received her MA in History from Boğaziçi University. She completed her PhD thesis entitled The Loss of Modesty: The Adventure of Muslim Family from Neighborhood to Gated Community at the European University of Viadrina in 2014 with support from the Global Prayers Project initiated by MetroZones. Çavdar has worked for several universities and news outlets in Turkey. Currently, she is a visiting scholar at the Center for Near and Middle Eastern Studies at Philipps University, Marburg. With Volkan Aytar, she co-edited Media and Security Sector Oversight, Limits, and Possibilities, published in 2009, and with Pelin Tan, co-edited The State of Exception in an Exceptional City, published in 2013.
Deniz Dağ

(MA and MSc) works as a doctoral researcher in the project ‘Women’s and Gender Studies at Universities in Turkey’ at the University of Bremen in the Unit for Intercultural Education.

Dağ has a professional background in multiple fields consisting of research, policy and academic management. In addition to her position as a researcher in the project, she is pursuing her PhD on the relation of women’s and gender studies to Turkish state policies. She holds a double master’s degree in European studies from the University of Southern Denmark and the University of Flensburg, and in Southeast European studies from the University of Athens. She has worked in a variety of institutions and NGOs in which she provided support for organisational matters, research and for drafting policy. Her main research areas consist of women’s and gender studies in Turkey; minority politics and regimes; and contemporary Turkish studies.
Atila Eralp

is Mercator IPC Senior Fellow and Professor Emeritus in Department of International Relations at the Middle East Technical University in Ankara. He has been awarded Jean Monnet Chair on Politics of European Integration since 2002. He has been the Coordinator of Jean Monnet Centre of Excellence since 2007. He was selected as one of the twenty European Success Studies by the European Commission in 2008. His research interests include enlargement process, neighborhood policy, EU’s foreign and security policy, and Turkey-EU relationship. Professor Eralp has published numerous articles and books on these issues. He coordinated and implemented various interdisciplinary EU funded research, training and communication projects.

Cansu Erdoğan

is a doctoral researcher at the Bielefeld Graduate School in Sociology and History (BGHS). Her dissertation explores the development of long-term care policies in Turkey in a comparative perspective. Erdoğan received her BA in Sociology from Koç University, Istanbul and her MA in Sociology from Bielefeld University. At Koç University, Erdoğan also contributed as a student assistant for two semesters to the research project ‘Multidimensional Youth Typologies in Turkey’, funded by TUBITAK.
Ivo Furman

is an assistant professor in the Department of Media at Istanbul Bilgi University. He completed his PhD in sociology at Goldsmiths College, University of London in 2015. His research has been supported by numerous institutions including the Arts and Humanities Research Council (AHRC), the Danish Agency for Science and Higher Education, Turkish Science and Technology Foundation (TUBITAK) and Stiftung Mercator. His research interests include computer-assisted methods focusing on Twitter, digital sociology, sociology of data and data journalism. Featured on Policy & Internet, his most recent publication ‘End of an Habermassian Ideal? Political Communication on Twitter during the night of the 2017 Turkish Constitutional Referendum’ uses network analysis to explore political polarisation on social media.
Mathis Gann

is currently studying political sciences at FU Berlin’s Otto Suhr Institute. Before moving to Berlin he worked for German TV ARD for five years of which he spent two years in Turkey as a part of ARD’s team in Istanbul. Mathis is a member of the Blickwechsel team in Berlin since 2018.

Ardahan Özkan Gedikli

is a PhD student at Koç University’s Graduate School of Social Sciences and Humanities and research assistant at Middle East Technical University as part of the TRIANGLE Project. He holds a Master of Arts in Conflict, Security and Development from University of Sussex. His research mainly focuses on International Development, Foreign Aid, Political Economy and Turkish Foreign Policy.
İpek Göçmen

is a postdoctoral researcher at Max Planck Institute for the Study of Societies, Cologne. She holds a PhD from the International Max Planck Research School on the Social and Political Constitution of the Economy and University of Cologne. Her research interests include comparative social policy, religion and welfare, gender and child protection. She has published in journals such as Journal of European Social Policy, European Journal of Women’s Studies, Social Science & Medicine; Gender, Work and Organization.
Ece Göztepe Çelebi

earned her BA and LLM in law/public law at the University of Ankara/Turkey. She obtained her PhD in German and European public law from the University of Münster/Germany and has been meanwhile a postgraduate fellow of the Friedrich Ebert Foundation. Afterwards she worked as a research fellow at the Institute for Political Sciences at the University of Münster where she offered courses on gender studies, the juridical and political system of Turkey as well as theories of democracy (2002-2005). As of September 2005, Göztepe has been teaching Turkish and comparative constitutional law at the Law Faculty of the Bilkent University (Ankara/Turkey). She has been awarded with the research scholarship of the Alexander von Humboldt Foundation (AvH) (2012-2013) and serves since 2014 as ambassador scientist of the AvH. Her research and teaching interests focuses especially on constitutional review, citizenship, democracy and legitimation, political rights, gender equality, European public law with special emphasis on sovereignty, integration theories and European identity.
Liana Harutyunyan

was born in Yerevan, Armenia in 1995. In 2016 she received her Bachelor’s Degree in Turkology from Yerevan State University, Armenia. In the same year, she moved to Germany. Now she is a Master student at Freie Universität Berlin at Institut of Turkology and is writing her Master Thesis. In her research, she examines Armenian and Turkish Civil Society based on Civicus CSI country reports between 2004-06. Since April 2018 Liana is a part of the Einstein Team.

Pierre Hecker

is a senior researcher and lecturer at the Center of Near and Middle Eastern Studies at Philipps-University Marburg, Germany. He is the author of the book Turkish Metal: Music, Meaning, and Morality in a Muslim Society. His most recent publications include a book chapter on ‘The “Arab Spring” and the End of Turkish Democracy’ in Arab Spring: Modernity, Identity and Change from 2019 and an article entitled ‘Islam. The Meaning of Style’ in Sociology of Islam from 2018, which deals with the emergence of Turkey’s modest fashion industry from a subcultural perspective. Currently, he is the head of the research project “Ne mutlu ateistim diyene”: Atheism and the Politics of Culture in Contemporary Turkey’, which is funded by Blickwechsel: Contemporary Turkey Studies of Stiftung Mercator.
Rights and equality in contemporary Turkey

Tuba İnal-Çekiç

got her PhD degree from Urban and Regional Planning Department of Yıldız Technical University. She has been a visiting fellow in Humboldt-Universität zu Berlin in 2013 and 2016 at Institut für Genossenschaftswesen. She worked in HCU-Hamburg between September-2017 and November-2018 in the research team of Cities4People focusing on participation in mobility related projects which was funded by Horizon 2020. Her research interests are focused on urban movements and urban commons from a participatory planning perspective. Her last article titled ‘Resilience of Urban Systems in the Context of Urban Transformation: Lessons from Beykoz – Istanbul’ is recently published in ‘Resilience and Urban Disasters’, Edward Elgar Publishing.
Yasemin Karakaşoğlu

is a professor in the Department of Intercultural Education at the University of Bremen, head of the Unit for Intercultural Education and the manager of the project entitled ‘Women’s and Gender Studies at Universities in Turkey’. Karakaşoğlu studied Turkology, philology and political science at the Universities of Hamburg and Ankara and worked as a researcher at the Centre for Studies on Turkey in Essen from 1991 to 1995 and at the University of Essen from 1996 until 2004. Her PhD received the prestigious Augsburger Wissenschaftspreis in 2000. She has published extensively on the educational situations and careers of migrant children and adolescents in Germany; Islam in German schools; the headscarf discussion in German schools; and the living conditions and orientation of girls and women with migrant family backgrounds. She was a member of the Expert Council of German Foundations on Integration and Migration from 2009 until 2015 and is a member of the advisory committees of the Freudenberg Foundation, Otto-Benecke-Foundation, the University of Hildesheim, the BAU International University for Applied Studies in Berlin and other committees, including for the DAAD programme starting in 2016. She was a member of the university management as Vice President for Intercultural and International Affairs from 2011 until 2017.
Rights and equality in contemporary Turkey

Ayşegül Kars Kaynar
completed her master studies in City University of London, and got her PhD degree from the Political Science Department of Middle East Technical University. She has been researcher in New School for Social Research, and visiting fellow in Hamburg University, Türkei Europa Zentrum. Her research interests involve contemporary Turkish politics, legal studies, and civil-military relations. In 2015, her dissertation was awarded by Turkish Social Scientists Association in the “Young Social Scientists Contest”; and in May 2017, her article titled “Law in Neo-liberal Era and an Introduction to Neo-formal Law” was awarded with honorable mention in Halit Çelenk Law Awards.

Zeynep Kıvılcım
is an associate professor of public international law. She got her MA and PhD degrees from Université Paris II and she taught gender and law, critical approaches to public international law and international human rights law at Istanbul University until October 2016. Her work and research deal critically with the politics of legality with a gender perspective. In Germany she taught and did research in affiliation with different universities and academic institutions including Georg-August-Universität Göttingen, University of Osnabrück, Humboldt-Universität zu Berlin and Berlin Institute for Advanced Studies (Wissenschaftskolleg zu Berlin).
Lutz Leisering

has been a professor of social policy at Bielefeld University since 1999. He has published widely on the theory and history of the welfare state, and on both European and global comparative social policy with a focus on income security (old-age pensions, social assistance) and qualitative and quantitative policy analysis, including ideas and discourses. Leisering and his team of junior researchers have done empirical studies of various non-Western countries including China, Taiwan, Korea, Brazil, India, South Africa, Bulgaria, Ukraine, Belarus and Russia. Through his research project FLOOR, funded by the German Research Foundation (Deutsche Forschungsgemeinschaft), he has created the leading international database on social assistance in every country of the Global South. Leisering most recently published the book The Global Rise of Social Cash Transfers: How States and International Organizations Constructed a New Instrument for Combating Poverty in 2019.
Kerem Gabriel Öktem

is a postdoctoral researcher at Bielefeld University. He received his PhD from the Department of Political Science at Bilkent University in 2016. His dissertation explored the emergence of welfare states in the developing world and included a novel measurement of welfare stateness on the global level. Öktem has worked on different research projects, including ‘Mapping the Turkish Welfare State’. He has published articles on subnational development in India, voting behavior in Turkey and the conceptualisation and measurement of social rights and social stratification in the Global North and the Global South.

Moritz Rau

holds a master’s degree in political science from the University of Cologne. He is a Research Associate at the Centre for Turkey and EU Studies (CETEUS). As CETEUS Project Assistant, he has been engaged with the Turkish-German University since 2015. Moritz Rau studied at the Middle-East Technical University in Ankara and gained practical research experience in Nicosia. His research interests are in the area of Turkish foreign policy, German-Turkish relations and the Cyprus issue.
Maximiliane Schneider

is currently studying Social Sciences (MA) at Middle East Technical University in Ankara and Humboldt-Universität zu Berlin. She has an academic and professional background in media and was previously working at Goethe-Institut Ankara, being responsible for public relations and digital media.

Anke Schönlau

is a Research Associate at the Centre for Turkey and EU Studies (CET-EUS) and Project Manager of the TRIANGLE project. She holds a master’s degree from the University of Bonn and focuses on EU-Turkey relations and the EU’s external energy policy. During her studies, she spent two semesters in Istanbul and, as an intern, gathered experience with the German Federal Foreign Office and the European External Action Service.
Mirja Schröder

is the Vice-Director of the Center for Turkey and European Union Studies (CETEUS) at University of Cologne and senior researcher of project TRIANGLE. Prior, she worked as a research associate and project and financial manager of several research and teaching projects. Mirja Schröder holds a PhD from University of Cologne. Her main research interests include the EU’s Energy Policy and Energy Security, Geopolitics, EU-Turkey relations and Franco-German relations.

Nurdan Selay Bedir

is a PhD student at the Department of Political Science and Public Administration and a research assistant at the Center for European Studies at Middle East Technical University. She holds a Master of Science in European Studies and a Master of Arts in Latin American Studies. Prior to TRIANGLE, Nurdan has already contributed to research projects on EU-Turkey relations. Her research interests include EU and European Politics, EU-Turkey relations, Social Movements, Turkish Politics, Spanish Politics, and the European Left.
Silvia von Steinsdorff holds the Chair of Comparative Political Science and the Political Systems of Eastern Europe at Humboldt-Universität zu Berlin since 2009. She is the Vice Dean for International Affairs and the academic director of the Integrative Research Institute for Law and Society together with Anna-Bettina Kaiser. Since 2009 she is also Academic Director of the International Masters Programs and between 2015 and 2018 she was the Director of the Berlin Graduate School of Social Science. Her main research interests are - among others - in the intersection of law and politics (in particular, constitutional courts and constitutional politics), organization and impact of parliament and party systems as well as questions of democratization and transformation (in particular Eastern Europe and Turkey). Accordingly, she teaches - next to the introductory courses in German Politics - courses on law and politics, comparative analysis of political institutions, as well as on research design and qualitative methods.

Özgehan Şenyuva

is Associate Professor at the Department of International Relations at the Middle East Technical University (METU) in Ankara. His research focuses on public opinion studies, European Union enlargement and integration, Turkish membership prospects, research methodologies and measurement. He has worked as a principal investigator of the large scale Horizon 2020 research project ‘FEUTURE – The Future of EU-Turkey Relations: Mapping Dynamics and Testing Scenarios’, which ended in 2019. Şenyuva is also a member of the Pool of European Youth Researchers of the European Commission and the Council of Europe. He holds a PhD in political science from the Centre for the Study of Political Change (Circap) at the University of Siena, Italy.

Funda Tekin

is the Managing Director at the Institute for European Politics (IEP) in Berlin as well as TRIANGLE’s Project Director and External Senior Research Fellow at the Centre of Turkey and European Union Studies (CETEUS) at the University of Cologne. She focuses on EU-Turkey relations, the integration of the European Union, EU institutions, Euroscepticism and the value of Europe. She has published numerous papers and essays, and was responsible for the editing of several anthologies on the subject of the integration of Turkey and the European Union. Tekin studied economics and social sciences at the University of Cologne and at the Institut d’études politiques de Paris. She holds a PhD from the Faculty of Management, Economics and Social Sciences at the University of Cologne.
Ertuğ Tombuş

holds a PhD in political science from Bilkent University, Ankara, Turkey. He is a Research at the Department of Social Sciences, Humboldt Universität zu Berlin and the academic coordinator of Blickwechsel: Contemporary Turkey Studies Program. Before joining Humboldt, he taught at Columbia University, The New School for Liberal Arts, Eugene Lang College, Western Connecticut State University, State University of New York and Izmir University of Economics. He is the managing editor of Constellations: An International Journal of Critical and Democratic Theory. He was a visiting research fellow at Northwestern University and Yale University and he earned MPhil in Sociology from the New School for Social Research, MSc and BSc in Political Science from Middle East Technical University. His primary research and teaching areas are political theory, theories of constitution-making, comparative constitutionalism, populism, secularism, political sociology and Turkish politics.
İrem Tuncer-Ebetürk

is a sociologist interested in globalization, international non-governmental organizations, sociology of law, and human rights. She received her PhD from the Department of Sociology of Emory University, USA, her MA and BA from Middle East Technical University, Turkey. Currently Tuncer-Ebetürk focuses on globalisation of certain women’s and children’s rights legislations and the backlash against those. In relation to that she study the rise of populist and authoritarian regimes in a comparative perspective. Finally, Tuncer-Ebetürk researches global cultural norms and how international non-governmental organizations negotiate such norms in times of backlash.
Sevgi Uçan Çubukçu

graduated from the Department of Political Science and International Relations at Istanbul University in the Faculty of Economics. She received her master’s degree from Boğaziçi University in 1995 with a thesis in political science titled Turkish Feminist Movement in the ‘80s: A Study on Two Feminist Journals: Kaktüs and Feminist. After studying for her PhD at the London School of Economics and SOAS University of London in 1999 as a visiting research fellow, she completed her PhD at Istanbul University’s Faculty of Political Sciences with her dissertation The Social Democracy in Post-Industrial Society: New Labour Party and The Third Way in 2002. She is the former director of the Women’s Research Centre of Istanbul University. She is a member of the general board of the Women’s Library and Information Centre Foundation and the collective of the Purple Roof Women’s Shelter Foundation. Çubukçu worked at Istanbul University until 2016 as a professor of political science and women’s studies. She is presently teaching cultural studies in the Department of Sociology at Mimar Sinan Fine Arts University and researching in the framework of the project ‘Women’s and Gender Studies at Universities in Turkey’. Her main academic focuses are political science; women’s and gender studies; feminist theories; theories of democracy; gender and democracy; modern political thought; and feminism in Turkey.
Seçkin Uçan
Divan

graduated from Marmara University with a degree in Art and Crafts Teacher Education in 1997 and she has been working as an art teacher since 1998. She also works as a painter and photographer and received several awards from different photography contests.

Wolfgang Wessels

is the Director of the Centre for Turkey and European Studies (CEU-TEUS) at the University of Cologne. He is a visiting professor at the College of Europe in Bruges and Natolin. He is also a member of the Founding Consortium of the Turkish-German-University in Istanbul and the Academic Director of the Master Program of European and International Relations. His research and teaching focuses on the political system of the European Union and in particular on the European Council; the role of the EU in the international system; the deepening and expansion of the EU; and theories of European integration. Since 1980, he has been publishing the Yearbook of European Integration and since 1991 the paperback Europe from A to Z.
Urszula Woźniak

is a PhD candidate in Sociology and a research associate at the chair for Comparative Political Sciences and Political Systems of Eastern Europe at the Department for Social Sciences Humboldt-Universität zu Berlin. She holds an MA degree in European Ethnology from Humboldt-Universität zu Berlin. Her research interests include political sociology and political anthropology, migration and transnationalism, urban studies and Turkish studies. Based on an ethnographic research on two Istanbulite neighbourhoods, her PhD project examines the relevance of the neighbourhood (mahalle) as a contested system of order in both the realm of everyday life and political discourse.

Tuğba Yalçınıkaya

is the project coordinator of the programme “Blickwechsel: Contemporary Turkey Studies” and is responsible for the project coordination, public relations and academic communication. She received her MA in Migration and Diversity with a focus on Turkey at Christian-Albrechts-Universität zu Kiel and Sabancı University in Istanbul. Besides, she is the co-founder of the German-Turkish cultural association Maviblau where she promotes dialogue between both countries in the fields of arts and culture, education and society.
Betül Yarar

has been working as a senior researcher at the Unit for Intercultural Education at the University of Bremen within the scope of a research project titled ‘Informal Opportunities and Restrictions of German Universities Reflected in Experiences of Exiled Scholars’ since February 2019. She previously conducted her own research in the same research unit as a Philipp Schwartz Fellow supported by the Alexander von Humboldt Foundation from 2017 until 2018. She graduated from the Department of Sociology at the Middle East Technical University, Ankara in 1991. She received her master’s degree in sociology from the University of Essex. She earned her PhD in sociology from Lancaster University. Following her academic studies, she started working as an assistant professor in the Department of Sociology at Abant Izzet Baysal University in Bolu, Turkey. She then moved to the Faculty of Communication at Gazi University in Ankara as an associate professor and became a professor in 2012. Her main research fields and academic interests are neoliberalism, the new right, popular culture, visual-cultural communication, identity politics, body politics, gender studies, women’s movement(s) and the social history of modern Turkey. She recently began working on topics like forced migration and higher education, particularly in Turkey and Germany.
Notes
Tuğba Yalçınkaya
Project Coordinator and Coordinator for Public
Relations of the programme
“Blickwechsel: Contemporary Turkey Studies”,
funded by Stiftung Mercator

Humboldt-Universität
zu Berlin
Institut für Sozialwissenschaften
Unter den Linden 6
10099 Berlin

Tel.: +49 30 2093 66588
Office: Ziegelstr. 13c,
10117 Berlin, Raum 314